Written by CGFictionA genomic fusion between malic enzyme and the small nucleolar RNA gene U34a-b, fused to the highly conserved small Cajal body specific protein 2 gene. The DNA sequence of the human and mouse genes for the small nucleolar RNA U34a-b, the small Cajal body specific protein 2 (SCP2), and malic enzyme (ME) has been determined from a 10.5 kb cosmid. The human gene is located on the short arm of chromosome 3 and the mouse gene on the long arm of chromosome 11. The ME gene is a tandem fusion to the U34a-b gene, the SCP2 gene is not physically associated with the U34a-b and ME genes, and all three genes are located on separate chromosomes in the mouse. The ME gene fusion with the U34a-b gene results in an unusual GC rich 5' end to the ME gene, whereas the mouse gene fusion leads to an unusual 3' end to the ME gene. The detailed gene structure of the ME-U34a-b fusion is compared with the arrangement of closely-related genes in the mouse genome.The structure of functional units of the central nervous system will be studied in terms of neuroglia and their influence on the development and functioning of the nervous system. For the purpose of studying the individual mechanisms of glial cell multiplication, nerve cell biosynthesis and other functions of the central nervous system it has been decided to introduce monorhodamine dyes into the central nervous system of developing and adult animals. The location and specificity of the dyes will be compared with that of the dye itself after in vivo and in vitro staining. Exper
