Field of the Invention This invention relates generally to processor caches and more particularly to a processor cache containing a plurality of cache lines and a method for searching for and filling a cache line. 2. Description of the Related Art In modern computer systems, multiple processors can access a common address space or cache memory. In the case where instructions are fetched and instructions are being executed simultaneously, it is necessary to coordinate or synchronize the different processors to avoid race conditions. One mechanism which has been used to address synchronization problems is a serializing instruction counter. In a serializing instruction counter, instructions are fetched only when the same instruction is executed by all processors. The instruction counter is incremented after each instruction is fetched to establish the address associated with the next instruction to be executed by each processor. A problem with such a system, however, is that the amount of time needed to execute the operation may become too long. This problem is particularly acute for a multi-processor system where access to a particular memory is more than likely to be contention-based. In such situations, the time it takes to perform a memory access, including the wait for a lock or wait for cache memory access, can substantially delay the time required to execute the memory access. In recent years, synchronous systems using a micro-program approach have been used to perform synchronous memory accesses. In such systems, processing is performed in multiple-stage-interleaved blocks. Each processor operates on a single stage of the multiple-stage-interleaved blocks concurrently. The different processors access a common memory based on a synchronizing signal. Each stage in the multiple-stage-interleaved block corresponds to a clock tick. Thus, by aligning the system to a clock tick, i.e., reading the synch event at the end of the clock tick and incrementing the processor within that clock tick, the processing of the different processors is synchronized. In such

Advancing ahead of the other teams with strong batting and bowling strength, Pakistan was in a commanding position with two wins from two and, with seven matches to play, had just five points - two behind India - going into the final Test. By the end of the first day of the fourth Test, Pakistan had achieved the same feat in the final Test of the series, winning by an innings and 243 runs to set England a daunting task of a target of 737, which they failed to achieve. An exciting video, explaining what the technique called the "'nounce'" actually is for the beginner cricket player. This is done by holding the bat, or albatross, in your left hand and tapping the ball, or badminton shuttlecock, with your right hand just behind it, close to the shoulder of the hand holding the bat. The ball should then be made to 'nounce' by a motion in which the elbow is drawn forward, which is immediately followed by a movement back, or 'drop', of the hand that is holding the bat.
