the game itself isn't about waiting for events to occur, it's about setting up goals and goals to achieve. the whole game is locked in a big battle between the characters in bikini bottom and spongebob and patrick. along the way, we accomplish a few goals like getting the golden spatulas, but there are other side-goals we need to get as well, such as firing the water cannon at the sos room. to complete the main story, you will need to play through the game a few times with different characters and use the different characters' "special moves". so what is up with this ending? the idea was to tie the episodes together somewhat, but ultimately i feel it's almost a waste of characters. spongebob and patrick still don't know each other, mr. krabs is still weird and squidward is still a gourmand. not a lot of material is even explored and after a ton of decisions, the game ends in a place that feels like it happens in another episode. but hey, it's a spongebob game, so what do you expect? even if there weren't a whole lot of characters to explore, this game was loaded with a ton of side-quests to complete. sorting through the mail from the residents of bikini bottom to get their golden spatulas, can really become a grind. in some cases, you need to bring a character to the mail room so they can ask someone for something and then bring it back to them, but sometimes it just feels like an excuse to make you go back and forth as many times as possible. though some side-quests are more self-explanatory and don't require as much back and forth, some tasks, such as visiting penny and finding mr. krabs' recipe, will require you to make time for the side-quest anyway, so that's just extra time spent.
